DOJ,

Microsoft has owned up to its end of the bargain and shown in good faith to come to an acceptable bargain. I think what bothers me most is the fact that our great nation was built on the prospect of business and the freedom to conduct that business in a free nation. We've come a long way in industry from seeking mere quantities to focused quality. Microsoft products are used in just about every aspect of business and government today. It's not because it's the only game in town, but rather the quality it offers to customers. Would be fair to say that any corporation in competition with each other are obligated to have its competitors products included? The consumer has choices, choices built on the principles of freedom. The settlement is fair and for all parties involved.
